Welcome to our Edinburgh Canal Festival summer zine/programme 2026

Every year the Edinburgh Canal Festival brings people together to celebrate the waterways, green spaces and communities that make this part of the city feel alive - and we're so happy to welcome you back for another year of events, music, activities and enjoying the canalside.

As you may know, this year we're trying something a little different by spreading the Edinburgh Canal Festival across three separate summer events - Community Open/Festival Day on 20th June 11-4pm, Picnic in the Park on 25th July 12-3pm, and the Raft Race on 22nd August 12-4pm.

What makes this festival possible is the incredible mix of people behind it. From our small FCCT team and dedicated volunteers to the local businesses, community groups, charities, performers, artists and partners who give their time, ideas and energy - this festival is truly built by the community, for the community.

Alongside the festival, we're preparing for a big new chapter with the opening of our new community space and office at Union Path - a place we hope will become a welcoming hub for creativity, wellbeing, learning and connection all year round. We're also looking forward to introducing a new electric boat to the canal, helping us continue making the waterways more accessible, sustainable and enjoyable for everyone.

Whether you're joining us for the Community Open Day, relaxing at Picnic in the Park, cheering on the Raft Race, volunteering behind the scenes, or simply stopping to enjoy the atmosphere - thank you for being part of it.

We can't wait to share this summer with you.

from everyone at the FCCT

We are fundraising to build a new electric community boat. This will save CO2 emissions, be almost silent to run so you will see more wildlife and be more comfortable. The new boat will be the first of its kind in Scotland with renewable energy features. We hope to develop the new boat into an environmental classroom for use by groups.

We are asking for donations so we start building it in July this year and launch it next Spring. If you would like to donate towards our new community boat at Fountainbridge, please donate via this QR code or visit www.fcct.scot and donate directly

How to preserve spring's abundance

By Lili Bor and Catherine Moar
Illustrations by Isabella Claydon

The Canalside Greenspace Group in Edinburgh is a community of people who care deeply about the environment. While we mostly garden along the Union Canal, these recipes are inspired by our annual foraging tour around Edinburgh, where we learn about cleavers (known colloquially as sticky willy), stinging nettle, wild garlic and many other edible plants. Fresh cleavers and nettle make a wonderful tea – invigorating and rich in minerals, it's long been cherished as a spring tonic. Wild garlic and few-flowered leek, on the other hand, are ideal for preserving as larder staples. We hope you'll enjoy these recipes!

GOLDEN RULES OF FORAGING

1. Only harvest plants you can identify with certainty – wild garlic and few-flowered leek resemble toxic plants like lily of the valley.
2. Collect sparingly from abundant populations. Wild boar, deer, rabbits, squirrels and pollinators all love wild garlic.
3. Leave the roots in the ground and allow plenty of flowers to bloom for ecosystem health and regrowth.

Did you know?

Word has it that few-flowered leek escaped from the Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh in 1863 and soon became an invasive species throughout Scotland. Today, it grows alongside the native wild garlic.

Wild Garlic Pesto

Slather this vibrant pesto on bread, mix it into pasta, or serve it as a dip for vegetables and crackers.

Ingredients:

- wild garlic leaves
- nuts (pine nuts, almonds or walnuts)
- grated Parmesan cheese (or nutritional yeast for a vegan option)
- olive oil
- salt and pepper
- a squeeze of lemon juice (optional)

Method:

1. Toast the nuts over medium heat until golden, then set aside to cool.
2. Wash the wild garlic leaves and pat them dry.
3. Add the wild garlic, toasted nuts, and grated cheese to a blender.
4. Blend while gradually pouring in the olive oil.
5. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Optionally, add a squeeze of lemon juice.
6. Use right away – or keep in a jar, topped with a thin layer of olive oil. Seal tightly and refrigerate for up to 2-3 weeks.

Pickled leaves, buds

Here are three options for tangy pickles which can be added to sandwiches, salads, cheese boards, or diced into sauces.

Ingredients:

- 1 • few-flowered leek stems, leaves and flowers
 - white wine vinegar or apple cider vinegar
 - salt, whole mixed peppercorns and a bay leaf
- 2 • few-flowered leek bulbils*
 - balsamic and raspberry vinegar
- 3 • few-flowered leek bulbils*
 - white wine vinegar
 - chilli
 - kaffir lime leaves

Bulbils are small, bulb-like structures that form between the leaf and stem or in place of flowers*

Method:

1. Rinse and trim the plant.
2. Pack into sterilised jars.
3. Boil vinegar with salt and spices.
4. Pour the hot vinegar into the jars, leaving a little space at the top.
5. Seal the jars and allow them to sit for a week before use.

Wild garlic oil

Perfect for drizzling over warm salads, roasted vegetables and seafood dishes.

Ingredients:

- wild garlic or few-flowered leek leaves
- extra virgin olive oil

Method:

1. Rinse and dry the leaves.
2. Lightly bruise the leaves to allow flavour to escape.
3. Put them in a bottle with olive oil and store in a cool, dark place.

Leek cubes

Stir straight into soups, stews, or stir-fries to enhance flavour.

Ingredients:

- few-flowered leek leaves and stems
- melted butter (or olive oil for a vegan option)

Method:

1. Rinse, dry and chop the leaves and stems.
2. Pack into ice cube trays and top up with melted butter.
3. Label and keep in the freezer for up to 6 months.

EVENT CALENDAR

Fountainbridge Canalside Community Trust loves to organise events that connect people to community and place they live, work or play in! We especially focus on activities that bring people together and our events often have a wellbeing, outdoor or creative focus.

A JOURNEY OF DISCOVERY DOWN EDINBURGH'S CANALS

By Allan James McNaughton

I was born in Edinburgh in 1959, but while I have lived in the city most of my life, it was only when they started work on the Falkirk Wheel in 1997, that I found out about the canal on our doorstep.

The Falkirk Wheel now links the Forth and Clyde Canal (which runs from Glasgow to Falkirk) with the Union Canal (which runs from Falkirk to Edinburgh). It is the world's only rotating boat lift, and while it has become a tourist attraction in its own right, there's loads more to see on the canals.

For the past ten years, I've been volunteering as a helmsman on the Lochrin Belle based at Fountainbridge – a fully accessible boat that can be rented out for different activities. I have developed a keen interest in the history and heritage of the canals. In 2024, I joined the Seagull Trust Cruises at Falkirk. The Seagull Trust has four boats at Ratho, two at Falkirk and two at Kirkintilloch. They run pleasure trips for residents of care homes and for children with additional support needs. The two at Falkirk can travel through the Falkirk Tunnel, the Falkirk Wheel and into the basin and back.

There are five Scottish canals in total, which make 141 miles of linked waterways: the Caledonian, Crinan, Forth & Clyde Canal, Monkland, and Union. The original purpose of the canals was to transport goods between towns and cities, and they originally used Clydesdale horses to pull the barges.

In the early 19th century the Lord of Callender refused to allow canal boats to go through his land so the engineers came up with a plan to build a tunnel going not through his land but underneath it. That is why the Falkirk Tunnel (pictured above) was built, and completed in 1822 - to allow the canal boats to pass through to get to the locks going down to the Forth and Clyde Canal.

The tunnel is three-quarters of a mile in length and now has colourful lights that guide the way through what was once solid rock - hand carved and blasted by the navvies who built it. After the canal boats pass through the Falkirk Tunnel, the boats travel along the Union Canal for 20 minutes until they reach the turning point to start down the fourteen locks of the Forth and Clyde Canal.

There would have been whole families living and working along the length of the canals. There would be lock keepers who would operate the locks to let barges and boats change heights to cross the hills of Scotland.

Families lived in the stable blocks to look after the horses. There were nine stable blocks to rest the horses for the night, so they would be ready for the next morning. Some stables have been demolished while others have been repurposed for community use. There were three in Edinburgh – one in Fountainbridge, another in Polwarth and another located on the site which is now Bridge 8 Hub in the Calders, Wester Hailes. The next stables were located at Ratho, Broxburn and Winchburgh, which is now home to a scout hall. Next were Linlithgow, Polmont and Falkirk.

There are three bridges in Edinburgh and one near Falkirk. Bridge 49 has two faces on it – one side has a crying face, the other a laughing face – each telling a story. The crying face looks west to Falkirk, built by Highland navvies who faced tough terrain, a tunnel, and eleven locks – so difficult that the contractor went bankrupt. The smiling face looks east, where Irish navvies had a much easier job and the builder made a tidy profit.

The other three bridges are in Edinburgh between Polwarth and Harrison Park. These are painted in blue, black, brown and red, representing different aspects of the canal. Blue is for sky or water, black is for the coal that was transported, brown is for bricks or wood, and red is

NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY. THE UNION CANAL

IS DIVIDED INTO FOUR STAGES AS FOLLOWS, VIZ.:-

The First Stage, styled the Edinburgh Stage, eight miles in length, commencing at Edinburgh, and extending to the commencement of the Sixth mile from Edinburgh.
The Second Stage, styled the Forthburgh Stage, eight miles in length, commencing at the western termination of the First Stage, and extending to the commencement of the seventeenth mile from Edinburgh.
The Third Stage, styled the Leithburgh Stage, eight miles in length, commencing at the western termination of the Second Stage, and extending to the commencement of the twenty-fifth mile from Edinburgh.
The Fourth Stage, styled the Haddingburgh Stage, eight miles in length, commencing at the western termination of the Third Stage, and extending to the junction of the Forth and Great Ouse Canals, and to the western termination of the Extension Cut.

Milestones pace out the 31 miles between Falkirk and Edinburgh accompanied by larger stage posts which mark the 'Division Betwixt Third and Forth Stages'. Four stages divide the Canal into approximately 8 mile lengths which govern the payment of dues, and may also have been for the men and women and children who lost their lives building them.

For me, it's a great honour to be a volunteer on the canal boats. I enjoy what I do and like helping people as well as welcoming guests onto the boat. When I'm on the boat I always wonder what the canal would have been like 200 years ago. I would have loved to have seen the horse-drawn barges and boats, or the ones with coal fires, as well as visiting the stable blocks and speaking to the teams that managed them. I would have enjoyed getting the chance to speak to the people that worked along the canal and hearing their stories in their own words.

It is a privilege to be part of the canals' history - and I hope to continue to do so.
